Get ready for graduate school with ACS!

Are you a college junior in the chemical sciences looking to take your education to the next level?

Coming this January, the ACS Bridge Project is launching a Graduate School Readiness and Professional Development Boot Camp, with support from the Genentech Foundation, for selected undergraduate students from underrepresented racial and ethnic groups.

- Identify individual values, strengths, and motivations
- Write guided personal statements and receive one-on-one feedback about improving personal narratives
- Learn and practice constructing competitive graduate school applications by using the NSF GRFP Fellowship as an example
- Gain crucial insights and experiences towards expanding and nurturing a professional network
- Receive career coaching towards enhancing professional development and identity

Don’t miss this engaging opportunity to learn how to become a competitive applicant for graduate school and an emerging professional!

Register for this virtual event at www.acs.org/bootcamp. Email bridge@acs.org for more details.
